James Barr, Business Management

The IMA speakers on Wednesday afternoon gave a great overview of the cert. and answered many questions as to what the difference was between that and a CPA. Students were invited to attend a larger regional meeting tonight in Parsippany. 15-20 students are expecting to go.

The S&P capital IQ kickoff meeting was a success. There were 102 registrants for the competition. There will be 17 teams participating with students from all majors. The first training session is today at 2:30 and there will be another Friday at 4.

For those of you here who were not able to register and who want to do so. Registration is now closed but I encourage you to contact S&P and or Professor Mick Ehrlich to see if an exception can be made.

The CFA team will be participating in the regional finals tomorrow night in NYC. Other schools in the final four include The Gabelli School of Business and Graduate School of Business Administration at Fordham University, The Rutgers Business School, and The Stillman School of Business at Seton Hall University. Winners will advance to Denver for the nationals and the winner of that will go to Bangkok to compete at the global final.

Under Grad open house will take place on the 23rd. I will be speaking at this event to incoming freshman and possible transfer students about the SOM, what differentiates us from other schools in the area and why NJIT should be considered when looking to study business
